The Administration, with Dean Harris in the fore, was destined to be the champion of the next important phase of extra-curricular work. The New Jersey Law Review was established in the Fall of 1934. It is this book that effects a proper correlation between the classroom instruction and the independent, voluntary, practical research that is so vitally necessary in molding a trained lawyer. The Law Review is the medium through which the actual problems of the practicing lawyer are presented to the student for his interpretation, and conversely, the medium by which the practitioner receives the fresh theoretic analysis of the scholar. The faculty graciously offered much valuable time and effort in launching the New Jersey Law Review.

The library of the school is constantly being enlarged by the gifts of grateful individuals who have themselves benefitted by hours spent within its confines, and by the constant expenditures of the Administration in its plan to make the library of New Jersey Law School a more valuable and useful and up-to-date study in the legal community.

Invaluable, too, are those experiences gained by the students in engaging in the preferred activities of the Debate Teams, the McClelland Law Club, and the Practice Court, which latter is a part of the curricula. Professor Frederick Grool has, since 1925, guided the Debate teams through competitive matches with the leading Universities and Law Schools.

New Jersey Law School stands today a monumental tribute to the ambitious efforts of its founders, especially Mr. Currier. It marks the fruition of the efforts of those who put in a great deal of work on the faculty of the school. It must be encouraging to those who had a hand in the active growth of the school to quse upon it as it stands now, to scrutinize its record, to feel proud of the careers of its trained graduates. A glance into the record reveals that among the former students are numbered men who have reached the heights politically, socially, and professionally—men who became United States Senators, Governors, Judges of every court of the State, Prosecutors, College Professors, Mayors, and the leading members of the New Jersey Bar.

In its size New Jersey Law School has grown. In its service it has expanded. In its value it has become inestimable. This year marks the first in the second lap towards its golden anniversary. The next twenty-four years, a short time in the life of a worthy Law School, will bring to a full realization all the hopes held in store for New Jersey Law School. Its history is in the making.
IN APPRECIATION

The Class of 1935 herewith expresses its sincere appreciation of the tireless, considerate, experienced pedagogy to which the class was exposed during its stay in the school.

Our teachers have done that which they intended to perform—the fundamentals of legal theory have been imparted to us and the seed of ambition—to continue to learn—has been implanted in our consciousness. Any resultant success that may attend the members of this class in the practice of the law will have had its origin in the efforts of our instructors.
