December 31st, 1935.

Dear Mr. Furst,

This message is being written on the last day of the year 1935. There is an unusually good reason that this should be so. The journalists, those ministers (sometimes true and often distorted) of the times, have decided that “the big news” of 1935 has been the Supreme Court of the United States.

Law has become news.

This is not important in itself, but it has profound meaning as a comment on what is going on among us. At every critical stage of our national life there has been a revaluation of the Constitutional foundation of our Federal government. Because ours is an era of fundamental change we are again examining the implications of the basic instrument of our legal structure.

The beginning of our history as a nation was in the Convention that produced the Constitution. The early thrust of the democratic genius amended the document by adding the Bill of Rights. The long debate over States Rights precipitated itself through civil war into constitutional amendments. It is almost inevitable that social crises among us shall emerge as statements of constitutional principles.

The current situation is therefore both an inspiration and a rebuke to those who would make the law their profession. It offers unbounded opportunities for high service to such as see themselves, however humbly, in the calling that is at the center of present constructive statesmanship.

It dignifies as inauspicious petty such as see the structure of the law as a mere opportunity for personal exploitation. To be a lawyer merely is nothing. To be a lawyer with a sense of the social implications of the law is to be a key person in a day of strategic importance.

It is with the hope that you will be successful in the practice of law, but with the inner hope that through the law you will be successful in the practice of yourselves that I give members of the Class of 1936 my cumulative best wishes for the years beyond.

Dr. Frank R. Kingson.
IN APPRECIATION

The Class of 1936 takes this rather ineffective form of expressing its honest appreciation of the sincere, able, untiring, kindly efforts put forth by the Faculty of the New Jersey Law School in striving to place it upon its feet so that it may walk boldly forth into the law equipped to do battle.

Our class is fortunate in that it was afforded a splendid opportunity to study the characters of men—the very men that were urging us to study the laws of man. What success we may have in the future will be directly attributable not only to the theories that they have inculcated in us, but also to the knowledge we have gleaned by studying their personalities.

ADMINISTRATIVE STAFF

Any attempt to revive memories of New Jersey Law School would be sure to recall to one's mind those persons who were neither student nor teacher, but, nevertheless, who were indispensable portions of the life of the school. Some of us were in daily contact with them; others had but only short acquaintances. But to know them at all was a real pleasure.

Lives there a man in this graduating class that has not had occasion to ask for and receive a favor of that dean of secretaries, Miss Dorothy M. List? The one thing she was incapable of saying was a determined "no." We remember, too, Miss Mary Adams as an efficient young woman—sure to rise higher in the columns of success. Her good fortune was to serve as Secretary to Dean Harris.

All of us, to be sure, have met Miss Lucille L'Homme, our Bursar. The meetings were usually under trying circumstances. We are aware, too, of the important part played in our school lives by Miss Mathilda Vottimer, despite the fact that her role is enacted somewhat behind the scenes. Mrs. Stanley Cole shall ever be the recipient of our thanks, for it is she who so kindly sorted our mail for us, and, also, who made it possible for us to learn—by keeping that emergency ink-well well filled. Her cherubic face illuminated an otherwise empty lobby.

Mrs. Barbara Negent, chief librarian, was certainly a real benefactress. Without her aid—we'd still be looking for that case in 2 N.J.U.}
