Senior Morning Class

LESS than three years ago, the dignified group comprising the Senior Morning Class was just another batch of raw material entering New Jersey Law School. Just as unprepossessing and uninspiring a group it was as the classes before it and the infinite number that will follow it.

However, it numbered among its members a group of leaders headed by Raymond Flanagan, its first president, and ably assisted by Miss Hilda Perlmutter, secretary.

The Freshman year of the Morning Division of the Class of 1933 was characterized primarily by a very hectic period of adjustment to an entirely new environment. Many of its members fell from its ranks when the grim, reaper examinations, mid-year and final, took its toll. But regardless of what happened at the final examinations, the freshmen had a hang-up time just after the last one, when they held a smoker in Newark. It is necessary to conceive only of the reaction to a strenuous period of studying to appreciate what a good time they had.

When the junior year commenced, the former freshmen had settled to their stride and had regained their confidence.

The able leadership of Raymond Flanagan prompted the class to require him to act a second term as president, and the scrivening of Secretary Perlmutter was so acceptable that she was again elected to that position, with Frank Caviolo holding the purse strings.

The junior year was characteristically uneventful, except that at the end the question of a class function arose. This time the feminine contingent in the class raised such a protest against a smoker that the disorganized majority was forced to yield to the dictates of a forceful and determined minority, and the class had a dance at the Orange Golf Club, on the day after the last examination.

When, however, having entered the senior year, the matter of a class elections arose, the class elected a new president, another son of Erin, George Duffy, while the new secretary was Ellsworth J. Sterner.

This time the class, prompted by the desire to have the function noted in the pages of The Legacy, and by the fact that many of its members thought that their luck in scholastic matters had lasted as long as conceivable possible and that it might desert them, leaving them without an opportunity to enjoy the annual class function, decided to act quickly. Hence the class provided a dinner-dance at the Blue Hills Plantation near Plainfield, New Jersey, in early December of 1932, jointly with the Senior Evening group. The affair was highly successful and well organized.

As it is about to terminate its association with its alma mater, the Class of 1933, whose graduation marks the twenty-fifth year of the existence of New Jersey Law School, wishes to felicitate the school, its management, faculty, student body, and alumni, on a quarter century of achievement, in which it has helped and of which it has partaken.

SENIOR AFTERNOON CLASS

Senior Afternoon Class

TIME marches on, imparting both knowledge and wisdom, academic and practical, to those who march with it. We, as part of the great host, have moved with time through the halls of the New Jersey Law School for the last three years, and now leave behind us this last brief record of our organization.

As Freshmen, infused with the freshness of spirit that so marks the beginner, and initiated into such mysteries as "briefs," Southern dialect and the Dean's "rats," on the third floor, we were organized with August La Corte, president; Irving Moskowitz, vice-president; Rose Spalletta, secretary; Albert Nis, treasurer; and George C. O'Brien, council representative. Our crowning glory for that year and all time was our victory in the interclass debates, the plaque being won by the team of David Rabinowitz, August La Corte, and John D. Murphy.

The second year found us once more on the third floor, organized under Leon J. Lavigne, president; Warren Sprout, vice-president; Rose Spalletta, secretary; Emanuel Finklestein, treasurer; and George C. O'Brien, representative. The year lagged. There was neither the freshness of the first year (as the siege was begun) nor the cheer of the last year (as the goal came in sight). Artificial stimulants helped materially. There was the class speaker, the class theatre party to see "Counseling-at-Law," and finally, the class dance marked the close of the Junior year.

Five of the class were elected to Seal and Scroll, David Rabinowitz, Meyer Bronstein, Irving Moskowitz, Leon Lavigne, and Emanuel Finklestein.

And then the last spurt organized, following the great political fracas, under president David Rabinowitz, vice-president Meyer Bronstein, secretary Rose Spalletta, treasurer Emanuel Finklestein, and representative Irving Moskowitz. But Rose Spalletta left us, and in her place we chose Bertha Zimmerman; and Emanuel Finklestein also left toward the end, so that Joseph Finkel was inducted, in time for the officers' group picture.

And now we march on, choosing to remember only our glory and triumphs, forgetting our defeats. But our defeats shall always be with us; for they are the most effective of lessons.

Class History

Senior Evening Division

With the advent of graduation, thoughts of the members of the Senior Evening Division are reminiscent of the pleasant beginning of class life at New Jersey Law School. Although the years have passed quickly, they have been replete with happy associations and activity. It is our pleasure at this time to relate the story of characters and accomplishments of the members of this class, who, although they will leave us soon, will be ever mindful of the splendid training in the study of law, and the happy associations they have contacted.

Freshman class organization was rapid. William Bartkalewew was elected president; Guido Brigian, vice-president; Sidney Alexander, secretary; Harry Bernstein, treasurer; and Abe Sien, student representative. They proved to be worthy leaders, and were very successful in bringing about an organization that has added much strength to the student body. Members of the class quickly adapted themselves to school environment, and became actively engaged in student affairs. Albert Clapp was appointed to the Barreista Staff, and Herman Bogan became one of its most popular contributors. When the Student Council sponsored a series of debates the class was unusually interested in the move, and elected a debating team represented by Burdette Bostwick, Albert E. Christie, and Herman Bogan. This team gained an enviable reputation among the other sections of the school.

The social season of the year was rounded out by a grand stag banquet held at the famous Tony's Restaurant. E. P. Boynton was made chairman of affairs, with Herbert Dwyer, Stephen Ceswik, and Abe Berman as assistants. To this day the class is mindful of the pleasant class spirit that prevailed. Members of the faculty were there to revel with the students, and as we are told, the fame of this first attempt at social recognition spread to foreign cities, and points further than expected.

The Junior year found more activity in school affairs. The successful candidates for offices were: Emanuel Cantor, president; Gabriel Kirzembaun, vice-president; Abe Berman, secretary; Arthur Caras, treasurer; and Albert Christie, student representative. Abe Sien was honored by being elected as secretary to the Student Council, and as well was appointed to the staff of the Lawy. Abe Berman was appointed to the Associate Staff of the Lawy. Mayer Scher was appointed to the Barreista Staff.

The social event of the year was a class attendance at a performance of Counselor-at-Law.

Before the end of the semester, as a reward for their unyielding efforts in student affairs, Abe Berman, Abe Sien, and Manuel Cantor were elected to the Seal and Scroll Society, honor society scholastic and activity organization. Abe Sien was also appointed Master of the Seal for the following year.

As a result of a keenly contested election, Albert Christie was chosen as president of the Senior class. Mario Farco was made vice-president. Abe Berman was returned to office as secretary. Harry Kolka was elected treasurer, and Herbert Dwyer, student representative. The Dean's list of honor students for the previous two years' work included the following men: Gabriel Kirzembaun, Herman Bogus, Mayer Scher, Abe Sien, Herbert Dwyer, Albert Christie, Arthur Bigelow, George Wofford, and Louis Kaul. Herbert Dwyer and Elmer Fisher shared the H. Theodore Song Prize in Real Property. Theodore H. Unterwasser won the "Law Student" Prize, and was named to both Barreista and Legacy Staffs.

A dinner dance was held at Blue Hills Plantation as a pre-vacation event. William Bartkalewew, Abe Berman, Herbert Dwyer, and Reuben Massonsky composed the committee. It was a successful affair—the lady guests added much to the prevailing class spirit.

It is the pleasure of the class to extend its great appreciation to the members of the faculty for their untiring efforts during the course of study of law. The class has been assured of whatever aid might be needed in the future, and it is with this thought that it parts, with memories of pleasant years spent at New Jersey Law School, and with a hopeful future because of the competent training received.

A. Paul Berman,
Class Secretary.
