SENIORS
SENIOR

Bill Terry was leading his struggling Giants into sixth place, Mr. Herbert Hoover was extolling rugged individualists, beer was just around the corner, Raymond Moley was a professor, Primo Carnera was just a boke with big feet and an astute manager, and the class of 1935, New Jersey Law School, was entering upon its profound course of study, as yet unaware of Tyrell's case, Harris' fiddichastics, or Tyree's southern accent. The morning division was a heterogeneous group, comprising many ages and professions and also several sexes—two to be exact. Green in the ways of the law and law school, the class soon became acclimated; that is, it discovered censored notes, by virtue of the Great God Danny. Life became a maze of anticipatory breaches, plus darwinian continuances, and third party beneficiaries.

Came the spring. Law, deprived of its novelty, was relegated to its proper position in a law student's schema of activities—somewhat higher than bridge or the movies, but considerably below tennis, beer parties, and that well-known sphere of activity to which the proverbial young man's fancy lightly turns.

Returning from a summer of lavish clerkship and other more pleasant pursuits, this class, now lofty juniors, plunged into a maelstrom of activities, curricular and extra-curricular. Charles Morgan was Business Manager of 'Lex Loci,' Joe Maher crowned the cause of the class in the Student Council, and Heyman Zimel was Associate Editor of 'The Barrister' and conductor of Olber Dorn, the tower of perielage. In the spring, this time, the young men's fancy turned to thoughts of debating, and, after the smoke had cleared—and the hot air as well—the 1935 morning division emerged with flying colors and championship keys. The team was composed of Joe Maher, Hy Zimel, and the epitome of nonesch, Murray Schonberg. Among the class affairs were a dance at a Chinese den of vice and a spring dinner at which, over beer and wasseil, the inimitable Sara Epstein provided much entertainment.

Followed then examinations—the darkness before the dawn of being seniors. Senior year was characterized by two leverish activities—basketball and Law Review. The Senior Morning class dominated the personnel of the Law Review. Bob Daly as Editor-in-Chief, Hy Zimel as Associate Editor, Morris Fishman as Case Editor, and Willie Katsky and Donny Lewis on the staff, were the Senior Morning students on the 'Review.' In addition, Joseph Maher was elected Business Manager, and Cameron Hughes served as Assistant Editor of 'The Barrister,' while other members of the class served on various publication staffs. As for the Senior Morning basketball team, to them goes the poigniant epithet—'They should have been champs!' Better expressed: 'For want of a center, the top was lost; for want of the top, the ball was lost; for want of the ball, the game was lost; for want of the game, the championship was lost.'

This despite the valiant efforts of such supreme ball hawks as Johnny Sullivan, Nat Weiner, Bob Reilly, Harry Friscione, Murray Schonberg, and Hy Zimel. Where, oh where were you, Bob Daly?

Before we depart, let it be said that the class' intelligent choices for officers were as follows:

MORNIG CLASS
SENIOR

It has often been said that life is like a long journey. If so, in a few short weeks, we shall have completed one of the definite stages of our journey.

Undoubtedly there are as many views of these three years as there are individuals in our class. To some the trail has presented itself rough and stony; three years filled with hard work, struggle and worry. To others, few indeed, three years have been an extended holiday; a long, lazy stretch of light work and fun, dotted by infrequent intervals of cramming for examinations.

But, for the most part, we are sure that our sojourn at New Jersey Law School, for most of us, has been serious business, though touched frequently enough with the spark of levity.

It is difficult at this time to pause and look backward; for the future is far too impelling. Despite certain disillusionments, the first blush of hope that we may soon attain a place in the profession has diffused our perception.

Our Senior year, now drawing to a finish, has been eventful and, except for the final exams impending, very refreshing. Courses have been more interesting since approached with enlarged perception.

Properly, as a history should, we record our class officers as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>President</th>
<th>Vice-President</th>
<th>Secretary</th>
<th>Council Rep.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1932-33</td>

<td>Paul G. Anderson</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

A few of the most important and most interesting events of our class history, however, do remain in our memories. We cannot forget the first days of our freshman year. Never to be obscured are the impressions made then by Dean Harris, "Professor" Tyree, and Professors Groal, North, Scarborough, and Sorg. Those were sunny days. We remember our visit "en masse" to the old Broad Theatre to see Paul Muni in "Counselor-at-Law."

Our Junior year was considered by many as our most difficult and trying one. Courses in Real Property, Wills, and Corporations required the utmost amount of concentration. We made our first acquaintance with "Mike" Chanalis, which considerably brightened an otherwise gloomy year.

Trusting that class mortality will be very low, and looking forward toward that vast expanse of "we-know-not-what" which looms ahead, after graduation, we absolutely turn our noses once more into the final whirring (for us) of the law school atmosphere.

AFTERNOON CLASS

* THE 1852 "LEGACY" OF NEW JERSEY LAW SCHOOL *
No blithe chronicle of collegiate joys is this, but rather the story of hard, earnest work throughout three years. They started with seventy students—sixty-seven men and the "three little maids," Esther, Betty, and Ann.

The study of Blackstone and common law pleading took the usual heavy toll in the Freshman year. In the Junior year many, discovering "the promises and plights of litigious terms, fat contentions, and flowing fees" an illusion, departed hastily and gladly. Many a last farewell was waved with unpaid bills at the Bursar's office.

There were few follies—just beer at Dave's occasionally, stormy, insurance politics in the Council, and some pin-up girls. The principal class affairs were held at the Chauncey in Millburn. In December 1932: the star affair at the White House, Newark, in May 1934: the girls had a spaghetti dinner all by themselves at the Roma, in Newark; and the dinner-dance at the Robert Trent Hotel in March 1935. The Junior Year, 1934, was the most eventful socially, because of the celebration of the school's Twenty-fifth Anniversary, marked by the services at the Old First Presbyterian Church in Newark, on January 17th; the Alumni Dinner on April 19th; and the Celebration Promenade at the Hotel Elton on April 21st.

Class officers were:

Undoubtedly these Seniors will hold many happy reunions in the future. All of them hope that on some balmy summer day they will find the time to take advantage of "Squire" Harris' invitation to inspect those magnificent pastures at the DeWitt's vast farmlands in Walpole, New Hampshire.
