To the Legacy

LAST year New Jersey Law School was thrilled by the activities started by the Student Council. It is a remarkable experience to witness the organization of a Student Council, the publication of an annual like the Legacy and a school paper like the Barrister all within the period of one school year. Nor does this mention many other activities undertaken by the council.

It has always been my experience that in new undertakings, the second year is the critical year. If new activities can survive during that period, the prospect for ultimate success is good. We have just witnessed an even more striking example of the strength that lies in the Student Council. The Mason Memorial Fund is the finest piece of student work which has ever been undertaken and carried to successful completion in the history of the Law School.

Today, no one has any doubt about the success of this year’s Legacy. The editors are to be congratulated on the fine progress they have made thus far. Without in the least detracting from last year’s issue, we may say that we shall be even more proud of the 1928 edition.

Personally, and for all the faculty, I wish the Board of Editors of the 1928 Legacy the greatest success.

March 8, 1928.
