To the Editor of THE LEGACY:

In his address to the alumni on February 22, President Angell of Yale, made the statement that no educational institution could be healthy and stand still. Before the next issue of THE LEGACY appears, New Jersey Law School will have reached its majority. This is not the place to recount what we have done during our first twenty-one years. One needs only to look about in any community in northern New Jersey to find graduates of New Jersey Law School who are taking a prominent part in the professional and civic life of the community. Our alumni have achieved distinction in the business world, in their profession, on the bench and in the governorship of our State.

My message to THE LEGACY is one concerning the future rather than the past. To me one of the most significant things in recent years is the will of Miss Anne Englebrecht, recently probated in Hudson County. Miss Englebrecht was not known to any of the administration or members of the New Jersey Law School. She was, however, so impressed by the work which has been done by New Jersey Law School that in the 28th clause of her will she created a trust fund of $3,000.00, the income of which is to be used for prizes to be given to the students of New Jersey Law School. Acts of this character show a confidence in the future of the school and are a cause of great satisfaction both to the Administration and the Faculty. The only way we will continue to merit this confidence is to carry out President Angell's thought expressed on Alumni Day in New Haven.

I am sure we are not going to stand still. I believe the next five years have more in store for Law School than any other equal period in its history. I hope that members of your class will look forward to sharing this progress with us. You occupy a unique position. You are the largest class which has ever graduated from Law School. You will hold this honor for a number of years since the requirement of the two years of college work will materially affect our enrollment for some time. This gives your class an important position in the Alumni Association. The voice of your class should be heard in that association often and authoritatively; it needs our joint assistance. Let us give it wholeheartedly. The success of the Law School and the success of that Association are closely related. Neither must stand still, for in growth is life and only in life is progress ever achieved.

On behalf of the administration I wish each member of your class the very best of success in his chosen profession.

Very sincerely,

RICHARD D. CURRIER.
